The artist Bozidar Brazda's new solo show, at Shoot the Lobster, is right on trend with the current gender-blindness of fashion and culture at large. Instead of hanging art, he created a seven-piece line of unisex basics—in "cult-member white, bondage black and beet-juice pink"—so that the basement gallery resembles a boutique that's intimidatingly spare. Which is good, because I want it all.

"Unisex Basics by Bozidar Brazda" is on view through March 1, 2015, at New York's Shoot the Lobster, 138 Eldridge St.
